Govan's Music Festival 2026

From our cultural correspondent Esme Clark

After a long and miserable winter, we are all looking for signs of spring to cheer us up. Hurray then for news of the Govan Music Festival coming from Sunday 22nd to Saturday 28th March.

Paul MacAlindin is giving us world music, ceilidh, Govan school choirs, a new musical from Riverside Primary, classical music from Scotland and France from the Glasgow Barons Orchestra and their String Quartet.

Add to that Free Up C.I.C. from the sober event provider and ending with a bang on the Saturday night with a Bhangra Night. With venues across Govan and ridiculously low prices, there is something for everyone!

THE MARY BARBOUR BRIDGE ?

Representatives of Govan Community Council attended discussions with the City Council on 3 March to put the case for naming the new bridge after Mary Barbour, the great housing campaigner.

In 1915 Mary united the tenants of the shipbuilding communities of Partick and Govan to demand an end to wartime profiteering by landlords – with the workers in the shipyards and munitions factories striking in support. The government gave in. Rents were frozen – and within four years good quality council housing was being built. The beneficial results lasted across Britain for sixty years. Enough to merit Mary Barbour's recognition ?

Community Wealth Building

Real wealth for our community: healthy people, good jobs, decent housing and control That's what we should fight for says Ruby Kelly from Maslows

You might never have heard of it before, but in February the Scottish Government passed the Community Wealth Building Bill. It's a long and boring read (trust me), but it could be an important one for our community.

In it they say they want to “redistribute economic power, strengthen local decision making, and foster sustainable growth”. Cutting through the jargon, that means more power in the hands of Glasgow City Council, and a chance to make the council work for us.

We need to ask ourselves; What would community wealth building look like in Govan, and how could it improve my neighbourhood? Is it more jobs? More tailored health care, better access to free childcare? More locally owned businesses, more support for existing independent businesses? Do we want our neighbourhood to be more appealing to tourists?

‘Make it beneficial for our neighbourhood’

North Ayrshire Council was the first in Scotland to pilot this in 2020. Since then they have reported an increase in local business ownership and money coming back into local residents pockets, instead of turning into profit for CEOs. But there is no guarantee that the bill will make any difference at all if it's not done properly, so we have to make sure it is beneficial for our neighbourhood.

Govan is a special place with a strong sense of self and community, filled with people working to help others; I am lucky to work alongside many of them. However, we all know that Govan is still suffering. We need more jobs, a stronger local economy, and autonomy over the buildings and businesses in our neighbourhood. How can we fix this? For years people have been asking this but it's time the solutions came from residents themselves.

Govan isn't a rat in a lab to be experimented on; our residents know our community, and care (often loudly!) about improving it. We saw how effective community action can be when the Water Row tenants teamed up with Living Rent to push back on rent hikes by Govan Housing Association/ Water Row Company (continued page 4).

Streetwork

GYIP's street work project has been in operation with partners (Police Scotland, Neighbourhood Regeneration & Sustainability, Glasgow Life and Local Housing Representatives) for eight years. The street work project has provided consistent, relationship-based support to young people in their own spaces over this sustained period. Its long-term presence has built trust with young people who may not engage with traditional services, enabling early identification of risks such as exploitation, substance misuse, mental health difficulties, or involvement in anti-social behaviour. Over time, workers have positively influenced attitudes, improve decision-making, and support access to education, training, health, and specialist services. This continuity helps young people develop resilience, confidence, and a sense of belonging.

Reduces Tensions

For the wider community, sustained detached work reduces tensions between young people and residents by addressing issues proactively rather than reactively. It can lead to reductions in anti-social behaviour, improved perceptions of safety, and stronger links between services, local authorities, and the community. Detached workers often act as a bridge, helping communities better understand young people's needs and perspectives. Unfortunately, this project will cease in April 2026 due to no more funding. This will result in trusted relationships being lost and progress that has been made with young people finishing.

Long-term costs of discontinuing detached youth work

Vulnerable young people may now disengage from support entirely, increasing the likelihood of harm, crisis intervention, or enforcement-led responses. For communities, this can result in increased conflict, higher service demand, and greater long-term social and economic costs. GYIP continue to look for funding to ensure this vital service continues.

Willie Jones, Community Council Vice Chair and Treasurer

Pat Cassidy, managing director of Govan Workspace and Trustee of Govan Heritage Trust, describes the battle to fund the full restoration of Govan Old

I can't help thinking back to just the start of 2025 when things seemed so hopeless, and the grand journey we'd embarked upon a decade earlier had run out of road. Our plan had been to construct an extension building that would rescue and breathe new life into Govan Old, but despite securing £1.5m from the Regeneration Capital Grant Fund, the project faced a massive shortfall of £650,000 that went all the way back to Covid, the lockdowns and the rampant inflation that followed.

Following the opening of Govan's new bridge in late 2024, visitor numbers and interest in the project had gone through the roof. The place was buzzing, all made possible by our volunteers who had turned out in numbers and done an amazing job handling unprecedented visitor traffic while delivering a customer service second to none. We were so lucky to have them, and they were already preparing for a bumper 2025 season.

One final almighty push had to happen, and I'm so glad it did. Because, to our surprise, bewilderment and delight, 2025 was to usher in one miracle after another. In February we got news the National Lottery Heritage Fund had approved a grant of £250,000, which turned out to be a real game-changer and was such a vote of confidence in Govan Old that other funders were to take heed.

The William Grant Foundation did just that and awarded us £75,000 in March. And our good fortune didn't end there. In May we received a grant of £150,000 from the Garfield Weston Foundation. In June Sir Alex Ferguson, a remarkable man who has never forgotten his Govan roots and who's supported us in the past, donated £50,000. Then, in July we received £30,000 from the Swire Trust.

It was all breathtaking stuff and a turnaround no one could have predicted. We were almost there but not quite.

The last piece of the funding jigsaw was to come from my own board, Govan Workspace, which made a decision to invest whatever was needed to bridge the final gap. The company didn't have that level of cash to hand but was prepared to borrow in order to ensure the project went ahead. A loan application was made to the Architectural Heritage Fund and was approved on 17 September 2025. For the very first time, the Extension package was complete.

It would have been such a tragedy if the extension plan had been abandoned. It has always been critical to Govan Old's viability, not just by generating money to meet overheads but, more importantly, by allowing the Victorian building to function legitimately as a public venue for the first time, with new toilets, disabled access and other facilities it didn't possess. The extension paves the way for Govan Old to become a proper museum rivaling any other in Glasgow. It has demanded a marathon effort on the part of everyone involved

We're very lucky to have such people in abundance here in Govan, individuals who simply don't know when they're beaten. Collectively, their actions and resolve have rescued the dreams and aspirations associated with Govan Old that were so close to being lost.

As the Govan Old project moves forward and takes up its rightful place at the heart of regeneration and Govan's future, they will all be able to look back with immense satisfaction and pride.

Annie Morgan reports from the Friends of Elder Park

The Friends continue to be active in helping with the maintenance of the park, building on the good works of previous members.

Rose Garden

The restoration of the Rose Garden remains the principal focus for the Friends, with the key intention of using this process as a means of galvanising community involvement, giving an opportunity for people to get out into the fresh air, improve mental and physical health and wellbeing by combatting issues such as loneliness and isolation and to provide a context for members of the diverse Govan community to meet and work together with a shared purpose. We welcome work by the NRS team at GCC to cut back the rhododendron bushes around the rose garden, though already it is clear this will soon need further attention. Below the Rose garden in its glory days.

Ancillary to this, the Friends have organised mini pop-ups featuring barbecues (and recently a pizza oven too), as well as planting days with the assistance of local young people and parents. The first of these took place at the beginning of February when the park hosted the Imbolc - the Celtic celebration to welcome the Spring.

The Portico

The Portico area (the original entrance to a local eighteenth century mansion) has been partially restored (thanks especially to the efforts of Willie Jones, now vice chair of Govan Community, and local company Montgomery & Son). Further work on the structure is planned in conjunction with Glasgow City Council.

There are a few simple ways to take action and make your voice heard: Register to Vote! The Scottish Government election is coming up soon on the 7th May. It might feel like your vote doesn't matter, or you don't trust the system, but the only way to have a say in who represents you is to vote! If you aren't sure if you can vote, confused about the election system, or anything else, a series of informational workshops will be held at Maslow's Community Hub. (more information at maslowscommunity.org) There will also be a hustings event where you can question the candidates directly.

Also, just because – and this is one I've heard a few times - you still need to pay council tax even if you aren't registered to vote. If you do register, it gives you a say in the amount of tax you have to pay!

Speak to your local representatives! We have four local councillors; Dan Hutchison, Ricky Bell, Stevie Dornan, and Imran Alam. We also have an MSP, Humza Yousaf, and an MP, Zubir Ahmed. It is their job to represent you and your concerns. This can cover everything from public transport and housing rights violations, to people dropping rubbish on your street. They each hold surgeries for you to come and speak to them about concerns you have- use them! Times can be found on the GCC website.

Join the Community Council! Govan Community Council meets on the first Monday of every month, 7pm-9pm, at Maslows Community Hub. These meetings are open for all residents to raise ideas, issues and concerns with the council and local representatives. Govan Community Council has historically had members take issues all the way to Holyrood and Westminster.

The Friends were delighted to be contributors to the Music Festival held in the Rose Garden in 2025, in co-operation with numerous local organisations and projects, especially Sunny Govan. This keeps alive honouring the requirement in Mrs Elder's gift, that the park be a place of music and healthful recreation. The Friends continue to have a key role in the newly formed Elderpark Community Events Committee (EPEC) which aims to provide a series of smaller events in the park throughout 2026.

Cleaning of the Pond

Ancillary to this, the Friends have organised mini pop-ups featuring future activity planned for the park including the long awaited cleaning of the pond, to be undertaken by NRS, and the enhancement of a Community Orchard, in tandem with NRS and The Tree Council, with the assistance of corporate responsibility volunteers. We aim also to include local schools in this activity. The Friends also aim to work together with the GALLANT team, a Glasgow University initiative who are active in looking at tree health in the park.

The statue of Lady Elder

Currently our focus is the Isabella Elder statue, where we are working towards creating a low maintenance site with gravel and container planters. We hope that this will help with increasing awareness of our work and attracting more volunteers, to build our capacity. Crucial to ensuring further progress is the issue of securing a suitable long-term location for the storage of community and FoEP equipment, for use in both park maintenance activities and the mounting of events.

The Friends of Elder Park are appreciative of Govan Community Council's interest in our work. We look for assistance in ways in which our capacity can be increased.

Govan Help moving to new premises to create a family centre in central Govan reports its chief executive Viv Sawers

Govan HELP has taken a lease on the building at 19 Nethan Street, formerly Rising Stars After School Care operated by Jobs and Business Glasgow, which will be developed to become Govan HELP Family Centre.

Following some capital works to refurbish the building more in line with our needs, the team aim to move into the space in May/ June 2026. Govan HELP was also successful in securing the funding for the delivery of GCC's Place Based Programme for Govan which will lead on consultation with the community towards a new community plan. Govan HELP is currently recruiting a Community Connector post to lead this project.

The Govan Pantry Food bank is facing more demand for food – but less cash to get it

The Govan Pantry membership is now 3792 people who have registered to use the service since it began in 2020. Sustaining The Govan Pantry has become more difficult due to changes in the Fare Share model which has seen a reduction of two thirds in the volume of food being supplied through our memberships and funders moving away from a preference for funding food projects.

In this financial year so far the pantry has registered another 253 new customers. Govan HELP is reporting more complexity in the challenges being faced by families who are accessing support. There is an increase in the number of CPI and NOC's being submitted to Social Work for families where there are concerns.

Govan Community Council backs the Fire Brigades Union in its battle to protect the Govan Fire Station

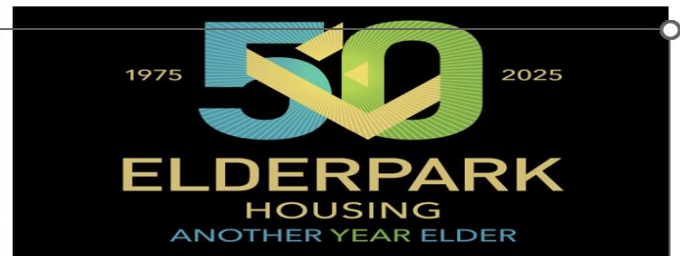

A year ago the Scottish government announced its intention, in light of budget pressures, to rationalise the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service.

Govan Fire station was one of those targeted. Just 'temporarily' one of its two fire tenders was removed prior to final decisions being made after the Scottish elections. The FBU, supported by the Community Council, has argued this is highly irresponsible with Govan's dense tenements, two major industrial workplaces as well as Scotland's biggest hospital - still with Grenfell Tower type flammable cladding.

Community Council
Secretary to 2025

I am a retired bookseller who moved to Govan more than 25 years ago. Not knowing many people here, I joined the Community Council hoping to make a connection with the community.

This was a great decision. I received a warm welcome, and if you are a nosey person like me, being a member of the CC offered great opportunities - to hear of planning applications and disputes and to have a voice in debates about the future of Govan. In due course as Secretary I found myself writing to Government ministers. The postman was most impressed by the official envelopes of their replies.

One of my particular interests is in housing and the CC is invited to openings of new developments. From ordinary blocks of flats, housing associations are now giving us great new communities like the flats near the new bridge with views to die for! Kitchen islands and lots of outdoor space like balconies and sunrooms (not that I'm jealous or anything?). At the same time I am acutely aware of the housing shortage and poor state of many of the older houses. This is one of the issues on which we have campaigned.

The CC has space for new members and gives a chance to have your voice heard. If there's something you feel strongly about, you will have the opportunity to question our elected representatives who are always invited to our meetings. With the CC behind you, your voice will be heard.

Govan has of course changed over the years. Refugees and asylum seekers have come to Govan and become part of our lives. COVID came along, and some much-missed shops closed their doors for good as well as our banks, although the fight for the latter goes on. And poverty has brought food banks and the Pantry came to Govan – an essential respite.

The CC is not fighting alone. Govan Reminiscence Group remembers other fights lost and won as part of Govan's history and Govan Central Action Plan looks to the future, into conserving what is good and investing in what is needed now. Friends of Elder Park are preserving one of our neglected treasures and the work of Govan Workspace sees Fairfields and Govan Old come onto the tourist trail. Many other groups are working too.

The Mary Barbour statue, across from our lovely new bridge, sees tourists taking selfies with Mary and her little Army and, as Secretary of the Remember Mary Barbour campaign, I am proud to feel a connection with that lady.

I mean to remain an ordinary member of the CC while I can still contribute, but as more and more work is done online, a new generation of IT warriors is taking over some roles. As for me, I can't wait to see what Govan does next!

Danny O'Neill
Community Council
Chair since 2023

I've been a member of the community council since 2017 and Chair for the last couple of years. I was born and bred in Govan and my family has deep roots here. My Belfast born granny arrived in Elderspark Street as a child in the early 1900s. She married a Cork man and settled in Govan. My dad was born in Taransay Street and my mum arrived from Galway in the early 60s.

I grew up in a tenement room and kitchen in Pearce Street. My family and most of the neighbours had lived in the close since before the war and everyone had relatives who lived nearby. The flat itself, like much of the housing in central Govan, was a slum. The kitchen wall had a massive crack caused by a German bomb hitting Yorkhill Basin in 1940. The private landlord had never bothered to repair it, so the flat was freezing and riddled with dampness. We had no central heating, no hot running water and just a toilet with no bath. But at least we had an inside toilet at a time when many closes in Govan still had outside toilets on the landing.

As a wee boy in the early 70s, Govan was a remarkably busy place, unrecognisable from today. The tenements were packed (overcrowded) and there were shops beside every close, much like Dumbarton Road or Byres Road now. That all changed in the mid-70s when the council started demolishing the tenements. We were lucky enough to get a council house in the new Harhill scheme but tens of thousands were moved out of Govan. As the housing stock was reduced the population declined, the schools emptied, families were scattered around Glasgow and beyond, and most of the shops and businesses, and the jobs, disappeared.

Govan in the late 70s and early 80s was a wasteland of derelict buildings and empty land. At one point there wasn't a single building left standing between Elder Park and Golspie Street. Mass unemployment in the 80s only increased poverty in the area.

I mention all this not to gain sympathy, but to point out that the problems faced by Govanites 50 years ago are the same problems facing people in Govan now. Govan has changed in many ways, but we are still blighted by unemployment and poverty, poor housing and a lack of shops and amenities.

And that's where Govan Community Council comes in. Founded in 1977, our job is to represent the people of Govan and their interests. Over the last 50 years we have organised or helped in numerous campaigns, for instance to save Harhill Baths and to oppose water privatisation. Govan CC, along with the other G51 community councils and the local tenants associations, founded Govan Against The Poll Tax, which played a big part in the anti-Poll tax movement in Glasgow. I was actively involved in that campaign, which defeated the government and stopped the Poll Tax. A perfect example of the power that ordinary people have when they organise.

More recently, we have campaigned against cuts to local government services such as cleansing and the fire service, and for better housing in Govan, to take some examples. Many of our members are also active in other organisations, such as the Govan Reminiscence Society, Friends of Elder Park, Maslow's, and the Govan Weavers. I am involved in Govan Community Trust (a project to bring disused shop premises back into public use) and Get Glasgow Moving (a campaign for better public transport).

If you are interested, please come to our monthly meetings. There is no need to become a full member or attend every month. These are public meetings. Everyone is welcome, whether your Govan roots go back a century or you're a newcomer. I have now moved to Partick, so can no longer carry on as Chair, but I'm still an associate member. Govan will always be my spiritual home.

The Community Council's new officers

CHAIR CLAIRE DICKSON

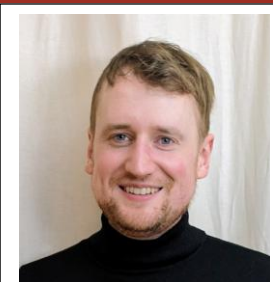

Claire possesses all the life experience needed for a chair of our Community Council and, with it, a full understanding of the issues that people face locally. Born in 1977 Claire grew up in the area and went to school at Craigton Primary.

At 20 she became a young mum. Three of her four children, one girl and two boys, attended the old Hills Trust Primary. At 31 she entered further education at Cardonald College and, after moving to Fenwick, to Kilmarnock College.

With the birth of her fourth child, Anna, she left further education and moved to Falkirk in 2014 finding work in a pub outside the town up in the braes – but soon used her FE knowledge to secure employment in a care home. Privately owned, this proved a difficult experience. Resources were inadequate for the care required. She moved to another private care provider that assisted those needing special help in their own homes, a somewhat better experience, but without the resources to cope with Covid.

After this she returned to Govan in 2021 with her youngest daughter Anna. Here she found respite and support within the Maslow's charity then being set up in Shaw Street and worked with its director Ruby to develop the premises as a 'community', an actual home for all who needed support – men and women – and contributing some of her own materials to make it feel welcoming, not an 'office'. She comments that locally, over the past thirty years, she has seen a decline in the social facilities that Govan needs, the lack of accommodation and safe spaces. Reversing this decline will be her main concern as Chair of the Community Council.

SECRETARY GREG EASTON

After years in retail and insurance, I'm now a mature student studying Computing who also sells houseplants. I joined the Community Council after seeing volunteers championing Govan's future and wanted to help and do what I could.

With no budget for stamps anymore, I stepped up as Secretary to bring us fully into the digital age, recovering our severed email lines and reopening communication with the City and beyond.

In my first six months, I've represented Govan at City Council meetings to ensure we get the investment we deserve. I'm passionate about building on the 50 years of hard work by my predecessors by making our streets safer for pedestrians and improving public transport.

Govan Old archaeology and Natural Heritage update

Govan Heritage Trust will once more be undertaking archaeological excavations and fieldwork during 2026. Excavations are being led by Professor Stephen Driscoll from the University of Glasgow and the fantastic team from Clyde Archaeology. Hundreds of volunteers participated between the 2022 season and September last year. During the earlier months of 2025 we concentrated on probing for sunken monuments and many previously unknown gravestones have been discovered through this meticulous survey work.

Pictish warrior tomb stone unearthed in 2024

This season we plan to:

1. To further examine the structures in the south-east corner of the churchyard, which in the 19th century were used to house the Govan Stones. This structure and an adjacent shed stand on the site of the original medieval entrance to the churchyard.
2. To continue the probing survey which locates buried grave stones, exposes and documents them.

Most of our volunteering places are now full for the archaeological dig itself but you can still visit the site and learn about the archaeological process and what we have found so far.

We will be having special open days at Govan Old on:

Saturday 11th of April (11am-4pm)

Saturday 30th of May (11am-4pm)

Both open days are free of charge and we'll have plenty of activities for families to enjoy.

This year we will also be paying special attention to the natural habitat of the church and surrounding land, and will be providing free family friendly activities so that people can learn about their local wildlife and how to spot them. Young people will especially like our upcoming Nature Detective workshops and can help us discover a rich variety of minibeasts in the Govan Old Churchyard.

Community Council helps remove scourge of dumped shopping trolleys

Dumped shopping trolleys in Elder Park pond

Over the past year Govan Community Council officers led by Willie Jones, along with our MP, have lobbied Asda about the constant problem of abandoned shopping trolleys littering streets and green sites. The outcome has been very positive. ASDA has installed a special barrier which makes it much more difficult, if not impossible, to get trolleys out of the carpark and down Craigton Road.

Unfortunately there are still other sources of trolleys, and these also need to be dealt with, but ASDA's trolleys are absent. A big thank you to ASDA's manager.

Community Council information

Govan Community Council meets monthly, usually on the first Monday of the month, in Maslow's on the corner of Langlands Road and Shaw Street. Anyone living in its area (from the motorway to the Clyde and from Drive Road to Broomloan Road) can attend to raise issues. The Community Council is, by rule, non-party political and non-sectarian. However, it deals politically with the needs of the community to raise issues of local concern with the City Council, the Scottish Parliament and the Westminster Parliament.

The Community Council welcomes new members. It currently has vacancies and plans to hold elections prior to the AGM this coming October.
